1

Stand your Kapla upright and close together to make the four walls: these are the uprights. To leave the openings, lay planks flat between them — two for a window, three for the door — then take them back out.

2

Run planks on edge all around the bottom of the walls, in front of and behind the uprights: that's the base course. Stop on either side of the door, so it reaches down to the ground.

3

In each window opening, lay two Kapla flat, side by side: that's the sill, the ledge at the bottom of the window.

4

On each base built in the previous step, stand three Kapla on edge: one at each side, and one in the middle. The middle one is called the mullion.

5

Lay two planks flat across the uprights: that's the lintel, the bar at the top. Your first two panes are done.

6

The lintel becomes the base for the next row; once again, stand 3 Kapla on it, exactly as you did the first time.

BUILDING IMAGINATION

Simple house

7

Close it off with 2 planks laid flat. Each window now has four panes!

8

The windows aren't done yet! One last time, stand 3 Kapla on edge in each window. They reach the very top of the wall, and each window has its six panes.

9

Lay Kapla on edge all the way around, balanced on the uprights: that's the wall plate, and it's what spans the door.

10

Cover the whole house with planks laid flat, pressed against one another and set crosswise. That's the ceiling, and the roof will rise from it.

11

Stack two rows of planks flat on the ceiling, dropping the two outer ones each time: the roof narrows like a staircase.

12

One more row of three Kapla, then a last plank on its own at the top. Your house is finished!

BRAVO!
